

Careers in Transitional Justice: A Discussion with Ruben Carranza of the ICTJ

What does the career trajectory look like from law school to a professional life in the field of transitional justice (TJ)? What role do lawyers play in that field and what are some of the typical job opportunities available to those with law degrees?

Please join the CHR&GJ in welcoming our special guest, Ruben Carranza, Acting Director of the Reparations Unit at the International Center for Transitional Justice here in New York, as he discusses his career path, his daily work in transitional justice, and options for law students seeking to enter the field.

About our speaker:

Ruben Carranza is the Acting Director of the Reparations Unit at ICTJ, where he works on reparations as a component of TJ in post-conflict and post-dictatorship countries, as well as the impact of economic crimes on TJ options. Mr. Carranza obtained his BA and LLB degrees from the University of the Philippines and his LLM from NYU School of Law in 2005 as a Global Public Service Law Program scholar.

Moderated by Veerle Opgenhaffen, Program Director, CHR&GJ

Furman Hall, Room 214 (245 Sullivan St.)
October 22, 2009, 4.00-5.30 PM

Space is limited. Please RSVP to Kelly Ryan at ryank@exchange.law.nyu.edu to be guaranteed entrance to the event.