

A Decade Lost: Locating Gender in U.S. Counter-Terrorism

Over the last decade of the United States' "War on Terror," the way women and sexual minorities experience counter-terrorism has been invisible to policymakers and the human rights community alike. Panelists will discuss CHR&GJ's groundbreaking report A Decade Lost: Locating Gender in U.S. Counter-Terrorism and highlight unique gender dimensions and impacts of U.S. counter-terrorism in the United States, Asia, Africa, and the Middle East and North Africa.

The panel will feature the Report's authors—CHR&GJ's Research Director, Jayne Huckerby, and CHR&GJ's Gender, Human Rights, and Counter-Terrorism Fellow, Lama Fakih—as well as Arun Kundnani, Fellow, Open Society Foundations and Christopher Rogers, Afghanistan-Pakistan Regional Policy Initiative, Open Society Institute.
